TRYING TO SELL A DIAMOND. The Bucyrus (Onie) Journal relates the story of a farmer in that county, who found one day a beautiful specimen of quartz rock which had all the appearance of a diamond. He took it to a jeweller in Bucytus who, by way of a joke, told him it was a dismond, and offered him ten thousand dollars for it. The farmer supposed it was worth more money -he had read of the Koh-incor, which is prized at millions-and refused. He took it to Pittsburg, and a noted jeweller there told that he did not know how much it was worth but no bouse in the city was able to purchase it. This completed his infatuation. He took it to other jewellers, who pronounced it no diamond. He also took it to Philadelphia and New York. The Journal thus describes his adventures there:

Confidently he walked into Ball, Black & Co.'s, the eminent jewellers, and demanded an interview with the proprietors, It was granted, and our friend was ushered into a private room, when he coolly turned the key in the door, and to the infinite surprise of Ball, Black & Co., informed them that he had in his pocket untold wealth. Ball, Binek & Co., congratulated him and politely requested him to inform them what earthly interest that fact could be to them. He unswered nothing, but slowly drew from the breast pocket of his vest, the stone, and asked how much it was worth. Ball, Black & Co. answered that in a country where stone was scarce, it would be worth so much a perch, they had really forgotten the exact sum, but it it would be any accommodation they would send and inquire, and wound up by asking what his business was with them.

"Business," he gasped, "why to sell this diamond." They told him they had no desire to invest in that peculiar style of diamond, and without attempting to conceal their merriment, bowed him out. At Tiffany's, and all the other leading houses in that line of trade, be met with the same success and finally determined that the jewellers of New York, as well as those of Pittsburg and Philadelphia, were in league to swingle him out of the diamond; and so he determined to go to Europe with it and among the brokers of London and Paris find a market for it --But fortunately, just as he was on the point of embarking, he met with a merchant from Bucyrus who knew him and who finally succeeded in inducing him to forego his European tour for the time being at least, and brought him to his family. He still believes the stone to be a diamond, and will, no doubt start soon upon another wild goose chase to dispose of it.

Dr. Mackenzie, in the last number of his paper, has an article called "Great Men's the Shuttle, on Lock Stitch-a stitch well Descendants," in which he incidentally re-views the married life of the late Duke of washed and ironed; the other is a new MA-Wellington, and that of his second son, who lately died. The Duke's family did not amount to much-seemed to have been rather feeble every way. The Doctor then goes on to consider the singular fact that very many of the great men of the earth have never been represented by mule heirs, and a large number of them were altogether child-

We quote what he says on this head: "It is somewhat singular that very many great men, in ancient as well as in modern times, have either left no male children, or are now represented through the female line or by collateral connexions. In our ownland, the name of Washington stands foremost. He was childless. So were Madison, Jackson and Polk. Jefferson is represented through living descendants, only by his daughter. Aaron Burr had a daughter, but no son. Gen. Winfield Scott had daughters only. President Buchanan, Washington Irving, and many others, distinguished as statemen, soldiers, men of latters, &c., have

It is the same way in France. Corneille, Racine, and Moliere were childless. Voltaire was upmarried. Napoleon is represented only by his nephew. Guizot and Thiers have no children. In all other countries of Europe the same rule seems to obtain. Shakepeare, Bacon, Newton, and Locke left no male descendants. Milton's family consisted of two daughters. Ben Jonson left no male beir. Pope, Fielding, Smollett, Sterne, Steele, Addison, Bolingbroke, (St. John). Johnson, Goldsmith, Hayley, Cowper, John Wilkes, Chancellor Thurlow, and a long array of eminent literary and legal men were either unmarried, or had no male children by their wives. The great Doke of Marlborough, the Wellington of his day, lost his only son early, and his Duchy descended to his daugh ter, by act of Parliament, finally going to her nephew, the Earl of Sunderland, when the Churchill family thereby became supreseded by the Spencer. Lord Hill's title descended to his nephew. Lord Nelson's to his brother. Lord Lynedock, Lord Beresford, Sir C. Napier, and others, left no sens. The great Lord Clive's titles have descended to the Powis family through his daughter. And the newly-made Lord Clyde, better known as Sir Colin Campbell, is an old bachelor.

In literary men, this want of succession is very apparent. To the names already enumerated here we easily could add others of mark and note. Reginald Heber left no son. Both of Lord Brougham's daughters are dead. Lord Lyndburst has no son. Of Thomas Moore there is not now any descendant; all his chidren died during his life-time. Byron and Scott are represented only by the children of their daughters. James Montgomery was unmarried. Of artists, the number who have no direct descendants is unusually large. It is the same with statesmen. Pitt, and Lord Liverpool were never married. Burke's only son died before his father. Lord Wellesley, Fox, and Palmeraten bad no legitimate children. In truth, the principle seems very general. We merely state the fact; those who have more leisure and industry than we possess, may endeavor to asertain the
